CHARLES-TOWN, OCTOBER 18.

ON Tuesday last, Mr. John Wilson, Merchant, was married to the amiable Miss Polly Bonneau, Daughter of the late Mr. Anthony Bonneau.

Last Wednesday John Thomas, Esq; Lieutenant in the Royal Regiment of Artillery, and Deputy Superintendant for the Arkansa's, and some other Tribes of Indians, with his Lady, embarked for Monchisack on the River Missisippi, in the Brigantine Lovely Jenny, Lawrence Harvey, Master; in which Vessel also went, Mr. Francis Pouflett, Merchant. Lieut. Thomas had been some Years Deputy Superintendant in the same Quarter, but having been charged with being instrumental in alienating the Arkansa's, a very brave and warlike Tribe, with numerous Allies from the Spanish to the British Interest, was suspended; his Office being now restored to him, we may fairly conclude, that his Conduct, in that Department, was unexceptionable. The other Deputy Superintendants, under the Hon. John Stuart, Esq; are, Alexander Cameron, Charles Stuart, ——— M'Intosh, and ——— Tait, Esquires—all Gentlemen of unquestionable Abilities; but Mr. Thomas is the only English Deputy, and was appointed in Consequence of Letters he brought out from England.

On Thursday last sailed, with the Mails for Jamaica and Pensacola, the Comet Packet-Boat, commanded by Capt. Terence M'Donough.

The same Day, Henry Smith, Esq; and Son, returned from Philadelphia, in the Brigt. Friendship, Capt. Blewer.

It having been suspected, that a Vessel lately arrived here from Scotland, could not have on board so large a Quantity of Port Wine as 2300 Dozen, or 24,000lb. of manufactured Tobacco, the unloading of that Vessel was strictly attended to, by the Officers of the Customs, all last week, and, to the Honour of the Master and Shippers no Fraud has been discovered.

The Easterly Winds that have prevailed more than a Week, and still continue, have prevented the Magna Charta, Capt. Maitland, from London, coming in, although that Ship arrived off this Bar Friday se'nnight, when two Passengers came to Town in a Pilot-Boat.

On Thursday last died, the ingenious Mr. William-Rigby Naylor, Architect and Surveyor.

This Morning a fine Ship for the Leith Trade, built by Messrs. Begbie & Manson, for Captain Alexander Urkuhart, was launched at Hobcaw.

A Mail for Great-Britain, to go by the Le Despencer Packet-Boat, Capt. Pond, is to be made up at the General Post-Office next Wednesday, when that Vessel will sail, Wind and Weather permitting.

This Day a Parcel of NEW RICE, consisting of Twenty or Twenty-five Barrels, was sold at 75*s.* per Hundred Pounds Weight. It is very uncommon to have any so early at Market.

The Price of Carolina Corn is 22*s.* 6*d.* the Bushel.—Northward Corn is sold at 17*s.* 6*d.*

DANIEL TUCKER.

MR. DE ST. PIERRE, having met with repeated and great Disappointments, in his Attempt to introduce the MAKING of WINES at New-Bourdeaux, in the Back Parts of this Province, so as to render the same a considerable Branch of its Trade, merely by a Failure of that Support which he had Reason to expect, from some of the Persons on whom he most relied, to advance the necessary Sums, to carry him through, and complete, this important Undertaking.

Having, nevertheless, under that, and many other Discouragements and Difficulties, stedfastly persevered in his zealous Endeavours to accomplish this great End, so far as, that he has introduced large Quantities of the best FOREIGN VINES that could be procured, as well from Europe as from other Places, and now hath four Acres, or thereabouts, of two Years Growth, in the highest Perfection, of which an excellent Wine may be next Year made, of a Quality between the Burgundy and Claret.

But, finding himself in no Condition to proceed, to attain this desirable Object (although there is no Abatement of his Zeal and Attention) for Want of Cellars, Presses, and four able young Negroes, or rather of the Means to procure them; he finds himself reduced to the unhappy Necessity of soliciting the Assistance of Gentlemen of Public Spirit, and who wish to see such an Undertaking succeed, by a Subscription Loan of so small a Sum as £. 2000 Currency, to be laid out in the following Manner, viz.—About £. 1600l. in the Purchase of four Slaves, to be severally instructed and employed in the proper Management of the Wines, so as to enlarge the Vineyard;—without whose Assistance, that of four Acres, abovementioned, cannot be extended. The remaining £. 400 to be put into Mr. DE. ST. PIERRE's Hands, to provide himself with Presses, and to build a Cellar, absolutely necessary for preserving the Wine, which will be quite different in its Nature from that made nearer the Topick, as at Madera and the Canaries.

If there should be found Gentlemen who will advance the Sum now wanted, which he flatters himself there will, he proposes that the Money so subscribed, shall be paid into the Hands of a Committee chosen from among the Subscribers, who shall lay out and take the proper Measures, to secure the same to the said Subscribers.

Besides the Vineyard under his immediate Care, there are already several other flourishing Vineyards at New-Bourdeaux, under experienced Vignerons; and he expects to receive 50 or 60,000 Plants more, from Europe, this Year; for the Management of which particularly, he shall want the Negroes.

To conclude, upon the Reception this PROPOSAL meets with, greatly depends, whether this shall immediately become a WINE COUNTRY, or not.

 Subscription-Papers are lodged in the Hands of Mr. JOHN CORAM, Merchant, and at Mr. WELLS, Mr. CROUCH, and T. POWELL & Company's Printing-Offices, in Charles-Town;—where Gentlemen, disposed to assist Mr. DE ST. PIERRE, will please to give in their Names, and the Sums they are willing to advance, as soon as possible, it being of the utmost Consequence to him, that the Application of the Subscription-Money be made by the 1st Day of December next.—In which Case, his Vineyard may be enlarged next Year from Four to near Fifty Acres.

The occasional Causes of Avarice, exemplified and accounted for.

EPICURUS says, That to be rich is no relief from, but only an alteration of misery. In plain truth, it is no want, but rather abundance that creates avarice. Neither will I stick to deliver my own experience concerning this affair. I have since my childhood lived in three sorts of conditions; the first, which continued near twenty years, I past over without any other means, but what were accidental, and depending upon the allowance and assistance of others, without stint or certain revenue. I then spent my money so much the more chearfully, and with so much the less care how it went, as it wholly depended upon my over-confidence of fortune. I never lived more at my ease, I never found the purse of my friends shut against me, having injoined myself this necessity, above all other necessities whatever, by no means to fail of payment at the appointed time, which also they have a thousand times respited, seeing how careful I was to satisfy them; so that I practised at once a thrifty, and, withal, a kind of alluring honesty. I naturally feel a kind of pleasure in paying, as if I eased my shoulders of a troublesome weight, and from that image of slavery; as besides that I felt a ravishing kind of satisfaction, by doing a just action, and pleasing another. I except those payments, where the trouble of reckoning and bargaining are required; for, if I can meet with no-body to ease me of that burden, I avoid them, how scandalously and injuriously soever, all I possibly can, for fear of those little wrangling disputes, with which both my humour and way of speaking are totally incompatible. There is nothing I hate so much, as driving a bargain; it is a mere traffic of cozenage and impudence: Where, after an hour's debate and haggling, both parties abandon their words and oaths, for five-pence profit or abatement. And yet I borrowed at great disadvantage, for, wanting the confidence to speak to the person myself, I ventured my request on paper, which makes but a weak, if any effort; is a very unsuccessful advocate, and is of very great advantage to him who has a mind to deny. I in those days, more jocundly and freely referred the conduct of my affairs to the stars, than I have since done to my own forecast and sense. Most good husbands look upon it as a horrible thing to live always thus in uncertainty and do not consider, in the first place, that the greatest part of the world live so. How many worthy men have wholly abandoned a certainty of their own, and do so daily, to court the inconstant favour of Princes and fortune? Cæsar ran, above a million of gold more than he was worth, in debt, to become Cæsar. And now many merchants begin their traffic by the sale of their farms, which they send to the Indies:

Tot per impetentia fœta?
Over so many stormy seas.

In so great a drought of devotion, as we see in these days, we have a thousand and a thousand that pass it over commodiously, expecting every day their dinner from the liberality of heaven. Secondly, They do not take notice, that this certitude, upon which they so much rely, is not much less uncertain and hazardous, than hazard itself. I see misery beyond two thousand crowns a year, as near as if it stood close by me; for besides it is in the power of chance to make a hundred breaches to poverty, through our riches, (there being very often no mean betwixt the highest and the lowest fortune.)

Fortuna vitrea est: Tum, quùm splendet, frangitur, i. e.

Fortune is glass, the brighter it doth shine,
More frail, and apt to break 'tis, when most fine.

And, to turn all our fences and bulwarks topsy turvy, I find that, by divers causes, indigence is as frequently seen to inhabit with those who have estates, as with those that have none; and, peradventure, it is not quite so grievous when alone, as when accompanied with riches, which flow more from good management than income. Faber est suæ quisque fortunæ, i. e. Every one the hammerer of his own fortune; and an uneasy, necessitous, busy, rich man, seems to be more miserable than he that simply poor. In divitiis inopes, quod genus egestatis gravissimum est. i. e. Poor in the midst of riches, which is the worst kind of poverty. The greatest and most wealthy Princes are, by poverty and scarcity, driven commonly to extreme necessity: Can there be any more extreme, than to become tyrants, and unjust usurpers of their subjects estates? My second condition of life was to have money of my own; wherein I so ordered the matter, that I had soon laid up a very notable sum according to my fortune; not considering with myself, that that was to be reputed having, which a man reserved for his ordinary expence, nor that a man could rely upon the hopes of a revenue to receive, how clear soever his estate might be. 'For said I, if I should be surprized by such or such an accident; and, after the like vain and vicious imaginations, would learnedly, by this hoarding of money, provide against all inconvenience; and could moreover answer such as objected to me, that the number of them was too infinite, that, though I could not lay up for all, I could however do it at least for some, and for many.' Yet was not this done without great solicitude and anxiety. I kept it very close, and, as I dare speak boldly of myself, never talked of my money, but falsely, as others do, who, being rich, pretend to be poor, and, being poor, pretend to be rich, dispensing with their consciences for ever telling sincerely what they have. A ridiculous and shameful prudence! Was I to go a journey? Methought I never was enough provided: And the more I loaded myself with money, the more also was I loaded with fear, one while of the danger of the roads, another of the fidelity of him who had the charge of my sumpters, of whom, as some others that I know, I was never sufficiently secure, if I had him not always in my eye. If I chanced to leave the key of my cabinet behind me, what strange jealousies and uneasy thoughts was I possessed with? And, which was worse, without daring to acquaint any body with the cause. My mind was eternally taken up in this manner. So that, all things considered, there is more trouble in keeping money, than in getting it. And, if I did not altogether as much as I say, yet it cost me something to restrain myself from doing it. I reaped little or no advantage from what I had, and my expences seemed nothing less to me, for having the more to spend: 'For, as Bion said, The hairy men are no angry as the bald to be pulled;' and after you are once accustomed to it, and set your heart upon your heap, it is no more at your service, you dare not diminish it: It is a building that you fancy must of necessity tumble down, if you do but touch it. Necessity must first take you by the throat, before you can prevail upon yourself to lay a finger on it: And I would sooner have pawned any thing I had, or sold a house, and with much less reluctance or constraint upon myself, than have made the least breach in that beloved purse I had so carefully laid by. But the danger was, that a man cannot easily prescribe certain limits to this desire (for they are hard to find in things that a man conceives to be good) nor stint this good husbandry so, that it may not degenerate into avarice: Men being still intent upon adding to the heap, and increasing the stock, from sum to sum, till at last they vilely deprive themselves of the enjoyment of their own proper goods, and throw all into reserve, without making any use of them at all. According to this rule, they are the richest people in the world, who are set to guard the gates and walls of a wealthy city. All monied men I conclude to be covetous. Plato places corporal or human benefit in this order; health, beauty, strength and wealth, the last of which says he, 'Is not blind, but very clear sighted, when illuminated by prudence.' Dionysius, the son, acted with a good grace. He was informed, that one of his Syracusians had buried some treasure, and thereupon sent to the man to bring it to him, which he accordingly did, privately reserving a small part of it, only, to himself, with which he went to another city, where having lost his appetite of hoarding, he began to live at a more liberal rate. Which Dionysius hearing, caused the rest of his treasure to be restored to him, saying, 'that, since he had learned how to use it, he very willingly returned it back to him.'

I continued some years in this hoarding humour, when I know not what good dæmon fortunately put me out of it, as he did the Syracusian, and made me scatter abroad all that I had saved; the pleasure of a certain voyage I took, of very great expence, having made me spurn this love of money under foot, by which means I am now fallen into a third way of living (I speak what I think of it) doubtless much more pleasant and moderate, which is, that I spend to the height of my income; sometimes the one, sometimes the other may perhaps exceed, but it is very little, that they differ at all; I live from hand to mouth, and content myself in having sufficient for my present expence; for, as to extraordinary occasions, all the laying up in the world would never suffice; and it is the greatest folly to expect that fortune should ever sufficiently arm us against herself. It is with our own weapons that we are to fight her, accidental ones will betray us when it comes to the pinch. If I lay up, it is not to buy lands, of which I have no need, but to purchase pleasure. 'Non esse cupidum, pecunia est: Non esse emacem, vectigal est.' i. e. Not to be covetous, is wealth; not to be a purchaser, is a tribute. I am in no fear of wanting, nor desire of augmenting; 'Divitiarum fructus est in copia; copiam declarat satietas.' i. e. The fruits of riches lie in abundance, and satiety declares abundance. And I am particularly pleased with myself, that this reformation in me has fallen out in an age naturally inclined to avarice, and that I see myself cured of a folly so common to old men, and of all human follies the most ridiculous.

Feraulez a man that had run through fortunes, and found that the increase of substance was no increase of appetite, either to eating, or drinking, sleeping, or the enjoyment of his wife; and who, on the other side, felt the care of his œconomy lie heavy on his shoulders, as it does on mine; was resolved to gratify a poor young man, his faithful friend, who clamoured for riches, by making him a gift of all his wealth, which was excessively great (and which he was in the way of accumulating daily by the liberality of Cyrus, his good master, and by the war) conditionally that he should take care to maintain him handsomely as his guest and friend; and they afterwards lived very happily together, equally content with the change of their condition.

This is an example that I could imitate with all my heart. And I very much approve the fortune of an ancient Prelate, whom I see to have so absolutely stripped himself of his purse, his revenue, and care of his expence; committing them, one while to one trusty servant, and another while to another, that he has spun out so long a tract of years, as ignorant by this means, of his domestic affairs as a stranger. A confidence in another man's virtue is no light evidence of a man's own; therefore God is pleased to favour such a confidence. As for him of whom I am speaking, I see no-where a better governed family, nor that is more decently and constantly maintained than his; happy in having stated his affairs to so just a proportion, that his estate is sufficient to do it without his care or trouble, and without any hindrance, either in the spending or laying it up, to his other more agreeable and quiet employments.

THE growing Importance of the College of NEW-JERSEY, (for the Uſe of which the above Lottery is principally deſigned) is now generally known through every Province of America. This, added to the other Schemes for the Support and Improvement of the College, will afford ſo many Friends of that Inſtitutoin, an Opportunity of contributing with very little Riſk of loſing, and a conſiderable Chance of Gain to themſelves, who would not incline that the ſmall Sums they could ſpare, ſhould appear in a Subſcription Paper.
